Hadassah Head Seeks Law To Ban "Hate" Literature

The head of Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America, called on the U.S. Congress to enact legislation to ban the distribution of hate literature. Dr. Miriam K. Freund, president of Hadassah, declared that "the activities of the hatemongers and bigots in the United States give aid and comfort to those forces which seek our destruction."

Soviet leaders, she added, "seeking to undermine American prestige abroad, have chided us about the existence of hatemongering in the United States." She spoke at the four-day conference at Hadassah's headquarters, 65 East Fifty-second Street in New York. Hadassah has 318,000 members.

Dr. Freund told the delegates, representing every section of the country and Puerto Rico, that an increasing distribution of hate literature "betrays an apathy of Americans toward this crucial problem."

She declared that President Eisenhower should take the lead in a campaign against bigotry, hate, and discrimination, says the New York Times. "The activities of the hatemongers and bigots," she said, "provide a vehicle for foreign governments to strike at certain religious, racial, and ethnic groups in efforts to divide the American people. Soviet publications are only too eager to play up incidents that present America in a derogatory light."

Dr. Freund disputed First Deputy Premier Anastas I. Mikoyan on his assertion that the Jews within the Soviet Union had the right to develop their cultural facilities. "But he says the Jews want to become a part of Russian culture," she said. "It is inconceivable that over two million Jews would decide overnight to sacrifice their Jewish cultural heritage."

Discussing President Eisenhower's proposed budget for foreign aid, Dr. Freund declared that the requested $3,930,000,000 must be increased by Congress to provide larger funds for vital economic assistance programs.

Mrs. Alexander M. Dushkin, chairman of the Hadassah Council in Israel, said that Hadassah facilities there were being prepared to aid in receiving the expected heavy influx of immigrants.

Raised Many Millions For Jewish And Chinese Relief

David A. Brown, of Los Angeles, who had raised millions of dollars for Jewish, Chinese and other charitable causes, died in New York in Mount Sinai Hospital after a short illness. He was 83 years old. Mr. Brown was president from 1911 to 1929, of the General Necessities Corporation of Detroit, a large manufacturing wholesaling and retailing concern dealing with coal, coke, ice cream, refrigerators and other products.

He later was board chairman of the Broadway National Bank and Trust Company in New York; president of David A. Brown, Inc., investment counselors of New York; and president and publisher of The American Hebrew and Jewish Tribune, a religious magazine, says the New York Times. He had been active also in the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, the Palestine Economic Corporation and the Jewish Agency for Palestine.

In 1921-22 Mr. Brown was national chairman of the American Jewish Relief Campaign, which raised more than $14,000,000 in the U.S. for the needy in Europe. Under his chairmanship, the United Jewish Campaign raised more than $15,000,000 for Jews abroad between 1925 and 1928. As chairman for the United States of the China Famine Relief from 1928 to 1933, Mr. Brown raised more millions. He was formerly president of the American Friends of China.

Mr. Brown also served as finance chairman of Hebrew Union College, which in 1928 made him an honorary Doctor of Hebrew Laws, says the New York Times. He was formerly finance chairman of the American Union of Hebrew Congregations. Mr. Brown also sponsored a score of other Jewish relief programs and was active in behalf of the Red Cross, the Salvation Army and the Knights of Columbus.

He leaves his second wife, Mrs. Pearl Kroll Brown, whom he married in 1940; two daughters, Mrs. Jesse B. Sherman, of Yonkers; and Mrs. Carolyn Shapiro, of Morristown, N. J.; a brother, three sisters, and three grandchildren.

Archaeologist Says Bible Is Basis Of Many Finds

Several Judaean Kingdom villages, two of them virtually intact after 2,500 to 3,000 years, were discovered in Israel's Negev Desert by Dr. Nelson Glueck, noted Biblical archaeologist. Dr. Glueck has been making an archaeological survey of the Negev for the last seven years. On his last trip, in his crew of ten he was the only archaeologist. The others were drivers and heavily armed Israeli soldiers. His explorations this year were sponsored by the David W. Klau Foundation and the U. S. government's Intermediary Guarantee Fund.

Dr. Glueck, who is president of Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, reported his latest findings at the seminary's New York branch, 40 West Sixty-eighth Street, says the New York Times.

He said that he located one of the villages several miles north of the Great Depression of Makhtesh Ramon. The village comprised three long buildings, each with several rooms and with courtyards attached.

Dr. Glueck said there were also remnants of other buildings, including some circular in shape. He described the corners of the buildings as made of large, crudely cut limestone blocks. The corner of one building stood almost to its original height of seven courses. A course is a single layer of bricks or stone blocks.

"It would not be too difficult to effect repairs in this building, put on a new roof and move in," Dr. Glueck remarked. "The Nabataans and Byzantines apparently did just exactly that, or constructed other buildings, sometimes on different lines inside and over the older ones, and at times incorporating parts of other buildings when they did not simply take them over in toto."

Of similar architectural design, says the New York Times, was another Judaean village discovered by Dr. Glueck several miles west of the first one, near the Sinai Peninsula "where Moses camped." Dr. Glueck recounted that "almost every Judaean village had a fortress guarding it." He said that this defense system was probably based on "signals by smoke or fires" that enabled defenders "to prevent Bedouin and other marauders from invading, and enabled civilization in the Negev to continue and flourish."

The defense system enabled caravans such as that of the Queen of Sheba to travel through the Negev, he said. This was described in I Kings, 10:2 as follows: "And she came to Jerusalem with a very great train, with camels that bare spices, and very much gold, and precious stones; and when she was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart."

He described the Makhtesh region, where the villages were discovered, as "a broad valley, basically fertile, dotted almost every

Miracle Route Of Jews To Israel Smc By Kindness Of Austria, Italy, Yugoslavia, Greece In Their Escape From Rumania

The Rumanian Government is facilitating the emigration of Jews to Israel on an increased scale. Beginning slowly in September, 1958, the movement of Jews to Israel began to swell in December and exceeded 8,000 in January. The number may reach 10,000 in February. Twelve to fifteen thousand have departed since emigration was resumed, it is estimated.

Rumania and the Soviet Union contain the last two great concentrations of Jews in Eastern Europe, says the New York Times. The Jewish population in Rumania is unofficially estimated at 250,000 to 300,000. The Jews in the Soviet Union are believed to number between 2,000,000 and under 3,000,000.

The exodus from Communist Rumania may, according to some speculation, be the forerunner of an eventual mass movement out of Eastern Europe. The Rumanian Government's decision to permit a resumption of the Jewish exodus was explained on the "humanitarian consideration that families should be reunited." Many of those who have departed or are preparing to depart have relatives in Israel.

The Rumanian Government's decision was reached without negotiation with Israel or the American United Jewish Appeal agencies. The latter have assumed the financial responsibility and administrative burden of transporting the Jews from their point of arrival in the West to Israel. The need for considerable funds is said to be pressing.

According to one explanation, the movement of Rumanian nationals is not a question that may be negotiated with a foreign power.

In 1949-50, there were 100,000 Jews who left Rumania. In the closing days of the war in 1944-45 about 50,000 pushed their way westward to transit camps, says the New York Times. The wartime tragedy of the Jews in Rumania may be told in two figures. Their prewar population numbered about 800,000. Four hundred thousand perished in Nazi concentration camps. The outward movement in 1944-45 and 1949-50 reduced the population to between 250,000 and 300,000.

Since the first of the year the Rumanian Government has handled the problem of transit visas to facilitate passage through Hungary. According to available reports, the Hungarian Government cooperates effectively in transiting Jews through its territory to Austria, where the United Jewish Appeal agencies take over at the Vienna railroad station.

Emigrants are met by a fleet of buses that are on call for every train arriving from Bucharest. The wanderers are moved to hotels leased for this purpose, fed and housed for the night. The next day they are put aboard trains for Italy and moved to Naples, where Israeli and chartered vessels embark them for Israel.

The Austrian and Italian Governments facilitate the movements across their territories with a minimum of formalities and with great understanding.

The Italian Government controlling the end of the land route has shown, it is said, extraordinary kindness to the emigrants and cooperation with the Israeli and United States agencies, going as far as to place hostels at insignificant cost at the disposal of the Israeli and Jewish organizations whenever a housing crisis arises.

The Yugoslav Government also does everything it can to help whenever a convoy of emigrants arrives at its borders. The Greek Government in turn speeds the final stage to embarkation points when a convoy arrives from Yugoslavia.

The Rumanian Jews may leave Bucharest with about seventy kilograms (154 pounds) of personal belongings. Furniture and other possessions are sold to raise money for railroad tickets to the West and to defray the cost of complicated documents required by the Rumanian authorities, says the New York Times. The Rumanian administrative system makes the final documentation time-consuming and laborious.

Professional men, including physicians and engineers as well as civil servants, have been receiving exit permits along with artisans and salesmen. Most of the exit permits are collective documents for entire families.

In Tel Aviv Premier David Ben-Gurion foresaw the possibility of mass immigration of Jews from the Soviet Union. The Premier said factors underlying the migration from Rumania might lead to the elimination of barriers against "the largest concentration of Jews in the old world." The allusion was to the Soviet Union, where there are more than 2,000,000 Jews.

Mr. Ben-Gurion said he had reasons for this optimism but was not free to explain them. The Premier described the new trend in emigration policies in Eastern Europe as "the greatest miracle in current history."

He said the arrival of 250,000 Jews from Eastern Europe would strain Israel's capacity. He told representative subscribers to an Israeli loan to finance absorption of immigrants that he had pondered the unexpected policy reversal by the Rumanian Government, which had previously barred Jewish emigration.

He has come to the conclusion, he added, that the switch is no caprice but stems from factors ingrained in Rumania and her regime that led to a decision to get rid of the Jews. There are about 250,000.

The Premier said he regretted that Israelis did not fully appreciate the historic significance of the change in Eastern Europe's opposition to the emigration of Jews and that this generation did not appreciate the great privilege of being able to offer redemption to Jews facing annihilation.

Mr. Ben-Gurion said that the latest information from Europe was that Bucharest issued 8,000 passports to Jews in January. He said he expected a rise from month to month, reports the New York Times. The current wave of immigration is bringing the best kind of human material to Israel, the Premier added.

Unlike those who came from some Oriental countries, where labor is regarded as degrading, these immigrants are accustomed to labor and many of them are skilled. A thousand physicians are expected.

A loan of 20,000,000 Israeli pounds ($11,200,000) is being floated to finance the absorption of immigrants. Dr. Dov Joseph, treasurer of the Jewish Agency for Israel, which handles the immigrants, said 11,750,000 Israeli pounds had been pledged.

In New York William Rosenwald, national chairman of the United Jewish Appeal, disclosed that the organization is in process of negotiating a $30,000,000 loan from American banks to meet a fiscal emergency in Israel created by the sudden wave of immigration from Rumania, says the New York Herald Tribune. While the U. J. A. has borrowed from banks in the past to meet Israel's emergency needs, the proposed loan will be the largest the U. J. A. has ever undertaken, Mr. Rosenwald said.

Mr. Rosenwald spoke at a meeting of 600 representatives of various Jewish organizations in the metropolitan area attending the twentieth annual conference of the Council of Organizations of U.J.A. of Greater New York at the Astor.

Mr. Rosenwald noted the rate of migration to Israel from East European countries has been increasing and he suggested that in the near future "hundreds of thousands of Jews" may be permitted to emigrate.

Other speakers included: Aryeh Nesher, a leader of Mapai, Israel's Labor party; Leonard M. Eisenberg, former grand master of the domain of New York, Knights of Pythias; Municipal Court Justice Benjamin Shalleck; Benjamin Gebiner, assistant general secretary of the Workmen's Circle; Louis Segal, general secretary of the Jewish National People's Alliance; and former General Sessions Judge Jonah Goldstein.

In Philadelphia Abraham A. Redelheim, president of the Zionist Organization of America, asked for funds to meet the emergency created by the recent emigration of Rumanian Jews to Israel. He called this "the most urgent task before American Jewry."

Addressing the organization's national executive council, Mr. Redelheim said the exodus "may be a prologue to one of the most momentous events in all Jewish history — the mass movement of a large portion of Eastern European Jewry to Israel."

He called for the fullest participation by the Z. O. A. in the national emergency conference in New York, in behalf of the United Jewish Appeal campaign, says the New York Times. Joining in the call to all Zionists were Dr. Emanuel Neumann, of New York, member of the Jewish Agency Executive, and Rabbi Max Nussbaum, of Hollywood, chairman of the Council, who presided.

Dr. Morton J. Robbins, national chairman of the American Zionist Fund, announced that $230,000 had been raised in the last five months for projects in Israel.

Seminary To Change Training Program

The nationwide concern over educational standards and achievements, has led The Jewish Theological Seminary of America to re-evaluate its course of study. Feeling that the present emphasis on science at all levels of education makes it ever more essential for graduate schools in non-scientific fields to buttress their own curricula, the Seminary has reorganized its rabbinical training program, establishing a Rabbinical Department, in place of the Rabbinical School.

The new department has two parts, a Graduate Rabbinical School, offering a three-year course, and leading to ordination; and a School of Judaica, offering a program of one to three years leading to the degree of Master of Hebrew Literature.

The new curriculum plan is designed both to meet the changing needs of the young men now applying for admission to the Rabbinical School, and to train rabbis equipped with the highest possible academic qualifications to serve the American Jewish community. The last far-reaching curricular change at the Seminary was made in 1902, when the then new president, Solomon Schechter, formalized the requirement that all candidates for the rabbinical school must be graduates of recognized colleges or universities.

The present reorganization was announced jointly by Dr. Louis Finkelstein, Chancellor of the Seminary, and Dr. Bernard Mandelbaum, Dean of Students. According to Dr. Mandelbaum, the curriculum of the School of Judaica will make it mandatory for all students to concentrate, to an even greater extent than was previously possible, on the great texts of Jewish tradition for periods ranging from one to three years.

These studies in the School of Judaica will be pre-requisites for entrance into the graduate department, and will also qualify the student for the degree of Master of Hebrew Literature. Special comprehensive examinations and interviews will be required for this degree which will be granted upon satisfactory completion of all requirements in the School of Judaica.

The new curriculum organization, Dr. Mandelbaum explained, will have two immediate effects. First, it will enable rabbinical students to obtain a more complete mastery of the great classics of Judaism. Secondly, it will give the faculty admissions committee a second opportunity to screen candidates for the rabbinate after completion of their studies in the School of Judaica.

The new curriculum plan, Dr. Mandelbaum emphasized, opens the rabbinate to a wider segment of American Jewish youth, especially those who may have deferred their advanced Judaica studies in order to devote full time to their general undergraduate studies, and at the same time reinforces the high academic standards which have always characterized the Seminary's Rabbinical Department.

IN MEMORIAM

SPIEGEL: In loving memory of my dear husband, John Spiegel, who passed away on February 15, 24th day of Adar, 1954. Ever remembered by his wife, Tauba.

Elberta And Mrs. Isaac

BY SYLVAN KARCHMER

Elberta had worked for Mrs. Isaac longer than anyone in the Isaac family could remember; and the two women, like weathered old oaks, had aged together. If Elberta's hair seemed whiter than her mistress's, with that quality of cotton fresh from the stalk about it it was only because her African brown face made the contrast all the more striking.

Officially Elberta lived in the servant's house behind Mrs. Isaac's large two-story brick house on Forest Avenue, but since Mrs. Isaac suffered from cataracts, which made it virtually impossible for her to see, Elberta unofficially slept in one of the vacant downstairs bedrooms. In time, as Mrs. Isaac's contemporaries died off and as her sons and daughters with their own families demanding their attention had less and less time for her, Elberta became her sole companion. In old age, Mrs. Isaac was apt to revert to the Yiddish of her youth, and Elberta learned to speak it, too, though with a broad southern drawl.

The running of the big house, particularly the affairs of the kitchen, was left entirely to Elberta. Long ago, she had learned Mrs. Isaac's recipes for making the traditional Yiddish dishes; and, as Mrs. Isaac came less often to the kitchen, Elberta improved upon them by adding her own ingredients so that the matzo balls, for instance, were light and fluffy instead of heavy and greasy as they were apt to be under Mrs. Isaac's touch.

At the seder, when all the family congregated at the big walnut table under the glass chandelier, the sons would demand extra portions, and Mrs. Isaac would beam at the success of her dishes. "Eat, eat," she would urge them.

"Yes, Mamma, they are wonderful. They get better each year," they would praise her, and she would laugh under their extravagent compliments. "Elberta does exactly what I say," she would exclaim.

Elberta knew, of course, how to keep the dishes separate, the milk from the meat dishes, the Passover ones from those used during the year. She would not dream of serving oysters or crab, and she would have starved herself and Mrs. Isaac rather than buy meat anywhere except at the kosher meat market. She herself never touched pork, and at the approach of the Pesach season she knew how to set in motion the elaborate ritual for cleansing the house of leaven. One spring she went so far as to refuse to permit one of her friends, who worked in one of the large houses down the street, to visit her in the kitchen on the morning of the first seder because, as she expressed it, she couldn't allow "a goy in the house erev Pesach."

Her greatest trials came when one of Mrs. Isaac's daughters insisted upon using the big kitchen for the preparation of a family dinner. All the children lived in apartments these days and there wasn't room to make a proper meal whereas Mamma's kitchen was ideal. At such times, Elberta had her hands full to see that no one mixed up the dishes. She had to watch Mrs. Hannah in particular. Once, Elberta saw her using butter to make the meat gravy. It didn't seem possible — in Mrs. Isaac's kitchen! "Oh, Mrs. Hannah," she exclaimed, "what are you doing!"

Mrs. Hannah was frightened by the outcry. She couldn't make sense of what Elberta was protesting at because it had been so long since she herself had observed any of the dietary laws, and when Elberta insisted that they throw out the gravy, she was surprised.

"It's trafe, and you'll make the whole kitchen trafe," said Elberta. "Oh," said Mrs. Hannah, "Mamma will never know." "Now, Mrs. Hannah," said Elberta, "you can't do that. It's against the law and God will be mad at Mrs. Isaac. I can't have God mad at her for something she didn't even do."

"Well, I'm not going to throw out this delicious sauce," said Mrs. Hannah. "Then I'm goin' tell her," said Elberta. This would stop Mrs. Hannah. The daughters stood in awe of their mother's temper. "All right," said Mrs. Hannah reluctantly, "Just don't tell her, and I'll wash out the dish thoroughly." "We can't use that dish again," said Elberta. "You might as well take it home with you."

As the daughters expressed it privately among themselves, they did not want to cross Elberta in any way for fear that she would leave them and then who would look after Mamma? Crises were always arising and frequently only Elberta could solve them. There was the time that Mrs. Isaac's sight first began to fail her and Elberta warned them how dangerous it was for their mother to walk to the synagogue each Saturday morning. There were four busy intersections to cross.

The daughters did not know what to do. None of them had walked as far as the corner grocery store in years, and they weren't in any condition to make the two-mile hike to the synagogue each week. So at first they tried to persuade their mother not to go. But for seventy years she had been going to the synagogue, and how could she change her habits now?

Then they thought of getting her an attendant, but she would not hear of the suggestion, for she was too proud to admit that she couldn't see. "God will protect me," she would insist, and she continued to venture out alone, though occasionally she would ask Elberta as a favor to walk past the first intersection with her. Later, Elberta took to walking all the way with her and waiting downstairs in the vestibule of the synagogue until the services were over. Then, when she discovered that there was a dark passageway leading from this vestibule to the auditorium itself, she decided to sit in the family pew with Mrs. Isaac.

"A shwartza in the shul!" The gabbai, the shamos, even the President, were troubled. Though all of them had heard of the distant Falashas, none had ever seen a Negress coming to their shul, and here she sat in their midst! In the absence of the rabbi, who was away for the summer, they tactfully suggested that she remain downstairs, but Elberta refused to heed their hints. She had to be near Mrs. Isaac in case she was needed.

Eventually she came to be accepted, and no one paid her any special attention. She was merely another worshipper. She learned the responses in Hebrew and also when to stand up and during the Amidah she would move her body in the same rhythmic way that Mrs. Isaac did. At the conclusion of the service she would march down to the bima with Mrs. Isaac and shake the rabbi's hand and say, "Gut shabbos," and if later there was a bar mitzvah celebration, she was always invited to share in the festivities.

She never quite approved of the miniature challas or the gefillte fish that were served and she would keep Mrs. Isaac from eating too much. "The fish was made last week," she would caution. "Don't eat too much. We have better at home." "We have?" Mrs. Isaac would ask.

"Don't you remember — you made it yourself." "Yes," Mrs. Isaac would reply absently. "I did make it. Now when did I make it, Elberta?"

"Why, last Thursday. That's when you made it." "Yes, why should I eat their fish when I have my own delicious fish at home," Mrs. Isaac would say.

For years she enjoyed Elberta's dishes without giving her credit for them. When she went to St. Luke's for the long delayed eye operation, Elberta prepared all her meals, including breakfast, and brought them to the hospital in a cab, so that Mrs. Isaac would not have to eat non-kosher food. The Sisters in their long white robes were very kind to Mrs. Isaac, but she insisted on having Elberta near her. They chatted in Yiddish and discussed the rabbi's affairs and wondered when the New Moon came.

One afternoon, just before the bandages were removed from Mrs. Isaac's eyes, Elberta chanced to notice on the wall opposite the bed a small wooden crucifix. What in the world was it doing here, she wondered. Then she realized that Mrs. Isaac had not known of its presence, and the prospect here's what famed author-philosopher HARRY GOLDEN wrote in the Carolina Israelite

"One of my recent visits was to the Hotel Algiers and I wouldn't have believed it if I hadn't seen it with my own eyes. Not Las Vegas and not even the French Riviera, but XANADU, except that Kubla Khan was not so hot at the dining table. At the Hotel Algiers, you could actually hear the heavy table creaking under the weight of the food, and what food; and what a story — ah, if I can only capture a bit of the flavor; but at least you know that I will try."*

The Rabbi's Best Sermon And What Happened To It And To Him

Let me tell you the story of the rabbi who sought a suitable subject for his High Holyday sermon and what happened to him and his sermon.

He browsed through the bookshops and saw a few Broadway plays with serious themes and then a bit of "luck" came his way. It happened that that summer the twenty-five young women who had been present at the Hiroshima disaster had just come to the city for surgical rehabilitation. They were being cared for at a Jewish hospital, and the rabbi, by special intervention, was able to interview them!

Then, on one oppressively sultry and stifling summer's afternoon suffused with the stench and sounds of the city's traffic and building program, he finally found himself on the fourth floor of the wards where the girls were domiciled.

He pitied them there, so many miles from home, until he remembered their home was now also a place of horror, where they would walk only with masked faces so that none would embarrass them by beholding their disfigurations.

He listened intently to the meek and modest observations of Mrs. Yogiyama, their guide, as she recounted their story. A saintly and selfless young woman, she told the rabbi about their long and difficult journey, about the oppressive silence of the wards, of the anxiety and anguish which the girls experienced, how difficult it had been for them to take the long journey, and the weeks required for the plastic surgery.

Here in the non-airconditioned sections of the hospital, eight at a time, they reclined through the many weeks required for their restorative surgery.

"But love cures anxiety," Mrs. Yogiyama concluded, "even ten thousand miles away from home,

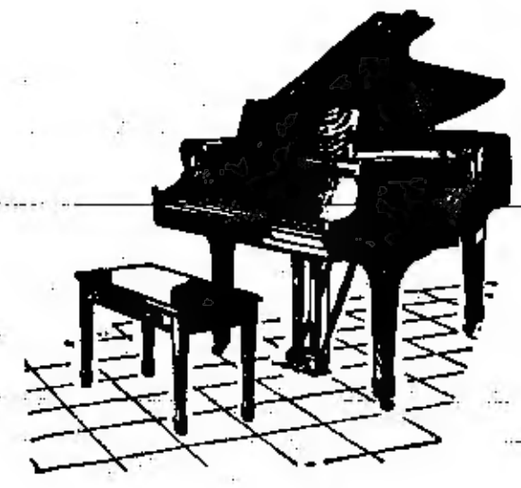
Piano Supremacy!

In tone,
in touch,
in styling



the finest piano in
history

In very few fields of commerce has a product stood out so prominently alone—for such a long time—as the Heintzman Piano.

For 108 years HEINTZMAN has been a household word and a symbol of Piano Supremacy. A fine Piano — built by and guaranteed by a fine Canadian Company.

The HEINTZMAN of 1959 is no exception — the finest piano in HEINTZMAN history — a piano with superb tone — an action so light your child will enjoy playing it — truly a piano for the entire family. It costs less than ordinary pianos — because it lasts longer.

To see it—is to behold a piano of breath taking beauty — to play it is an experience you will never forget — to own it is to possess one of your most cherished possessions.

of her mistress discovering it frightened her. When the daughters came she called them aside one by one and pointed out the crucifix, but none of them wanted to offend the Sisters by removing it so that in the end Elberta herself had to climb on a chair and take it down. She put it into a drawer where it remained during the balance of Mrs. Isaac's stay.

It was a new world that Mrs. Isaac saw when finally the bandages came off. Her daughters looked so old, and Elberta too — "Elberta, your hair's so white —." "Yes'm" replied Elberta. "It gets that way."

"Tell me, do I look as old — as you?"

"Oh, no, Mrs. Isaac, you don't look a day over fifty, and that's a fact."

"Ah," said Mrs. Isaac, "let me see myself in the mirror," and for minutes at a time she would stare at her reflection in the glass. But the new world in which she found herself never ceased to amaze her. One afternoon, while they were at the club sitting under the shade by the pool, sipping lemonade, Mrs. Isaac pointed to the sandy slope leading down to the water. "Are those women bathing without any clothes on?" she asked.

"No," said Elberta, "they got on bathing suits," "They're nothing but pants," said Mrs. Isaac, "and something around here—." And when she looked again and saw that her own granddaughter Flossie was among them, she called out to Elberta to order her in. "It's a shame to go out like that," she cried. And nothing would do but that Flossie had to be ordered back and lectured on dressing properly. "No grandchild of mine should be so indecent," she grumbled to Elberta.

They never brought her to the club again. Now with her eyesight restored, she and Elberta took to knitting; they made mittens and mufflers for all the men in the family. Eventually, everything went to charity and Mrs. Isaac was persuaded to spend her spare time playing dominoes instead of knitting. She used to play a skillful game, but now she seldom bothered to put her mind to concentrating, so that whenever the notion struck her she demanded points; and if Elberta hesitated, she would grumble and stamp her foot until Elberta put the figures down on the pad.

Sometimes her grandchildren were cajoled into playing with her, and when she insisted upon putting down, for instance, a six alongside of a three, they would protest that she wasn't playing fairly. "Untrained children," she would berate them in Yiddish. "We'll ask Elberta," they would say. "Elberta will tell us if you're playing right." "Mrs. Isaac always plays right," said Elberta.

"But she didn't," they would protest. "She didn't play right—." And in vexation they would run to their mother. "Elberta was wrong because Grandma cheated," they would cry.

"Mrs. Isaac played right," Elberta would stoutly maintain. "She always plays right." "But how could Grandma play right when she put her six on the three?" And then Elberta would be impatient with them because they didn't know Mrs. Isaac as she did and that cheating at dominoes didn't count.

In the end only Elberta remained to play with her mistress; night after night they played until Mrs. Isaac's eyes went bad again, and now she had difficulty reading her prayers. She knew most of the portions by memory, but certain key words of the text failed her. She would call to Elberta to find the place in the siddur, but poor Elberta, no matter how much Mrs. Isaac berated her, could do nothing with the Hebrew page. Once in a while, though, she would remember a fragment of the passage that she had heard Mrs. Isaac recite and she was able to give the line back.

Then Mrs. Isaac would sit back in her rocker continuing with her prayer. All morning she would pray, for there was little else she could do now. One morning when Elberta came to her with her morning chocolate, she found that Mrs. Isaac had rocked herself to sleep while mumbling her morning blessings.

The funeral was held Friday afternoon before sunset, and the large house was filled with relatives and friends. There were enormous quantities of food that people had sent in; and now, since Mrs. Isaac was no longer around, it didn't matter that the dishes were mixed or even that the roasts that were sent in by neighbors were trafe. In the evening, the Rabbi from the Reform temple, to which most of the family now belonged, held a brief service in the library.

Elberta had set the table in the dining-room under the glass chandelier, putting out the heavy silver and the crystal that Mrs. Isaac always liked to use on Friday night. Then, before she started to serve, she went to the cupboard. She took out Mrs. Isaac's two silver candlesticks, put candles into them, and struck the match. She carefully placed her hands over eyes and recited the blessing in a loud voice. For a thousand shabbos eves she had listened to Mrs. Isaac chant it, but this was the first time that she herself had the occasion to say the prayer. She did not miss a word, and in her heart she knew that Mrs. Isaac would be pleased with her.

The Changed Jewish World Of 1933-1958: How To Survive Culturally?

BY DR. NEHEMIAH ROBINSON, DIRECTOR OF THE WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS INSTITUTE OF JEWISH AFFAIRS, IN NEW YORK

Due to centuries-long historical developments, the geographical center of Jewish life until World War One was a strip of land in the middle of Europe. It embraced the Polish, Ukrainian, White Russian, and Lithuanian parts of the Russian Empire; the Austro-Hungarian Empire, Germany, and Rumania. In this area there lived at that time the vast majority of the Jews; thence went, in the main, the stream of emigrants both to Western Europe and overseas, to the new areas of Jewish settlements to which by now the center of gravity has moved. This was the Ashkenazic, more populous and further advanced, part of the Jewish people.

The Sephardic and Arabic Jews lived mostly a separate life in the areas around the Mediterranean Sea and, in smaller groups, in adjacent regions. They, too, sent some emigrants overseas and, to an even smaller degree, to Western Europe, but both in the general life of the Jewish people and in the immigration countries they played a secondary role to the Ashkenazic groups.

The stream of emigration from the geographical center of Jewish life in Europe which, from 1840 to 1914, accounted for by far the largest part of the over two and a half million Jewish migrants, was mainly a migration of surplus population. The center continued to grow in numbers and flourish in Jewishness. World War One and its aftermath changed the political map of Europe and created a barrier between the Jews of the Soviet Union and the rest of the world. The geographical, numerical and cultural center, however, remained mainly unchanged, Poland, instead of Russia, becoming the heart of the center.

Migration from these areas, except the Soviet Union, began shortly after the end of the war, but the doors of the immigration countries began to close almost everywhere. The role of the overseas communities which had, in the meantime, reached large figures grew but they were still dependent on the European center for additional numbers and as the bearers of Jewish spiritual and cultural values.

The situation changed with the rise of National Socialism. First, the peripheric areas of the center, Germany, Austria, and Czechoslovakia, were disorganized by persecution and emptied by forced emigration. With the outbreak of World War II, the whole center collapsed through the annihilation of the Jews whenever and wherever the Nazis and their minions gained power.

In 1939, European Jewry still numbered about 9,500,000, of whom over 7,500,000 were in the geographical center. But the annihilation of about six million Jews during the war, principally in this center, reduced it to a shambles. Poland and the Ukrainian and White Russian parts of the Soviet Union and Lithuania lost about 80% to 90% of their numbers; Hungary and Rumania, with a combined Jewish population in 1933 of approximately 1,250,000, lost about 800,000. In Czechoslovakia, Austria, and Germany together hardly 50,000 were left. A large portion of the survivors, including the Polish Jews repatriated from the Soviet Union, unwilling to live on in cemeteries, sought asylum elsewhere.

The establishment of Israel, which opened the almost hermetically closed doors of that country to Jewish migrants, contributed further to the emptying of the center.

By the end of 1958 a few smaller isolated Jewish communities remained, all in process of further reduction through emigration and natural decrease. The grand total of Jews, outside the Soviet Union, still remaining in this center does not exceed 350,000, with Rumania accounting for over one half of them. For all practical purposes the center is no more. Whatever remained alive, in particular Russia's more than 2,000,000 Jews, is mostly subjected to the double anti-Judaistic pressure of assimilation and isolation from the outer world.

The collapse of the Turkish Empire in 1918 changed the political situation in that area but as late as 1938, with very few exceptions, the Sephardic and Arabic groups continued to live in the old places and the old manner. The animosity of the resurgent Arab nationalism and the struggle for Palestine had affected practically only the Jewish position in Syria. In time, however, particularly after the Israel war of liberation, the Jewish position in the neighboring countries rapidly deteriorated. By now, Libya, Iraq, Syria, Egypt, and Afghanistan are almost "judenrein"; in Yemen a few hundred remain. In Turkey, Iran, Morocco, and Tunisia sizeable communities, although considerably reduced by emigration, still exist, but emigration and the decrease continue.

The debacle of the European center and the decline of the Sephardic and Arabic Jewish communities were compensated, in part, by the growth of the overseas communities. Israel alone gained between 1939 and 1958 about 1,200,000 Jews. The U.S.A., Canada, Australia, and Latin American countries took in most of the rest of the emigrants. The Jewish population center, due to annihilation and emigration, moved to the U.S.A. and Israel with their Jewish populations of 5,000,000 and 1,600,000, respectively.

The change was not a mechanical one. Instead of the Jewish majority living in a number of old-established communities with accumulated cultural values and organizational structures, although in countries with deep-seated anti-Jewish traditions and comparatively little economic and cultural development, we now have large young communities living in one of the most highly developed democratic countries of the world (U. S.A.), and in a nation of its own (Israel), with the rest distributed in smaller groups all over the world.

Not only the political and cultural but also the social and economic features of the Jewish people have undergone radical changes, changes which are even more accentuated by the difference between the cultural and political status of the two parts of the Jewish people, Israel and the countries of the Diaspora.

As long as the Jewish traditional center existed, the cultural survival of the Jewish people was assured. The main problem was the physical survival. With the destruction of the center the situation (outside Israel) was reversed: while the physical survival of the various communities may still be threatened, the main danger to survival lies now in assimilation and de-Judaism. In the fight for physical survival Jews were objects only and the main method to avoid physical destruction was to seek refuge in new places.

To survive culturally, the Jewish people must become the subject, the master of its destiny and seek refuge in the old traditional Jewish values adapted to the new circumstances. Migration was (except for Palestine and Israel) an unorganized, individualistic method; what is needed now, cannot be achieved otherwise than by good planning and organization on the domestic and inter-territorial plane.

The Jewish people have been so much engaged in the double task of salvaging the remnants of the holocaust and in the support of nascent Israel, that they failed to notice that the ground under their own feet was slipping. Fortunately, voices of concern and distress have become more and more audible in recent years. As late as in July, 1958, the Executive Committee of the World Jewish Congress, meeting in Geneva, made plans to call a special world-wide conference to deal with the problem of Jewish cultural survival.

At the passing of the year which marked the 25th anniversary of the beginning of the tragedy, it is proper to listen to these voices and embark upon a broad program of salvaging the spirit and essence of the Jewish people.

"What should I tell my people?" asked the rabbi.

"Tell them," she responded calmly and directly, "there were actually two series of operations, the first far more difficult than the second. The first therapy required the restoration of the souls of the girls, inner changes, confidence and faith in those who had been their enemies... the second, the physical therapy which would in time bring them to a normal rehabilitation, to that life which they had left in Japan.

"It is your people to whom we owe a special debt of gratitude," she added carefully, "not only for what the Jewish doctors have done here, but also because of that spiritual contribution which your people brought to earth which now makes it possible for us, at opposite ends of the planet, to trust one another."

The rabbi said he would never forget her, nor that moment. Here a miracle was in the making, as great as any in ancient days. Here was ground for the foundations of a faith that could transcend the evil of the new atom and become a harbinger for new world order.

As he returned to his car, hardly noticing the traffic ticket tied to the windshield wipers, he sensed something real had happened at last. He was oblivious of the sweltering heat, the broken cadence of whirring sounds of traffic. He would never be the same!

The message burned hot within him, gathering in intensity through the remaining weeks until that solemn Day of Atonement morning when he began to preach.

He told this congregation about the twenty-five victims of the atomic bomb. He relayed to them the irrepressible courage which he had seen in their faces, heard in their voices. He reminded them that a Jew is not truly a Jew unless he gives himself to causes and efforts which would reduce carnage and hatred. He told them that the release of atomic energy must be countered by the release of spiritual energy which will be the only defense we have against the mushroom cloud. He told them that each one of them was a potential killer or curer of other men, dependent on how fully they cooperate in endeavors designed to bring blessings instead of blastings to their fellow men. Never before had he preached with such power and fervor. It was the best sermon he had ever delivered.

The first one to reach him after the service was the temple president.

"Rabbi," he said crisply, "that was a good sermon. But too long. I thought you said you were going to hold it down to twenty-five minutes. You went on for thirty-two... I timed it myself."

Next in line to wish the rabbi a happy New Year was the Sisterhood president. "I liked your sermon, Rabbi," she gushed, "but you've got to do something about that robe. I couldn't take my eyes off of it all through the services. Those wrinkles! And look at those spots! You've got to have it cleaned and pressed before the next service. There were visitors here today, and we don't want to feel ashamed of our rabbi!"

With broad smile and vise-like grip, the Brotherhood president was now ready to extend salutations. Boomed he: "Rabbi, on a day like this why can't you speak on a Jewish subject? After all, what have we got to do with those Japs! They gave us a lot of trouble and they deserved the licking we gave them."

Others passed by and their voices added up to a vague chorus of irrelevancies until the rabbi made out the clear whisper of his wife, "Dear, you'd better break away, so you can get a little rest at home before the children's service this afternoon. And for heaven's sake, get that glum look off your face. Smile!"
